1891.

Harper's Magazine.

ILLUSTRATED.

The important series of papers on South America, by Theodore Child, will be continued in HARPER'S MAGAZINE during the greater part of the year 1891. The articles on Southern California, by Charles Dudley Warner, will also be continued. Among other noteworthy attractions will be a novel by Charles Egbert Craddock, a collection of original drawings by W. M. Thackeray, now published for the first time, a novel written and illustrated by Lewis Carroll, a novelette by William Dean Howells, and a series of papers on London by Walter Besant.

In the number and variety of illustrated papers and other articles on subjects of timely interest, as well as in the unrivaled character of the literary matter, music, etc., HARPER'S MAGAZINE will continue to maintain that standard of excellence for which it has been so long distinguished.

A STORY OF RETRIBUTION.

BY "WAWASH."

CHAPTER XVI.

Thus it happened, that although Mrs. Bregy and her husband had been parted for upwards of twenty years, he still held the same power over her which he possessed in the past and could control her as easily as he had done when he first made love to her on the benches in Washington Park.

With his wife Alphonse Bregy's secret was quite safe. Known as Mr. Emerick he was free to go and come as he pleased without the world being any the wiser regarding his identity.

Yet he was about to play a desperate game, and it would tax his deceptive resources and daring spirit to the utmost to carry it through to a successful issue. The world must learn at once that Mrs. Bregy was a widow, but the rest must transpire gradually. No suspicions must be raised.

One of the first whom Mrs. Bregy spoke to after telling her son of her disappointment was Mrs. Delaro. That good lady was very ready with her sympathy, yet she was really glad that the poor woman's mind had at last been set at rest. "You will not of course delay your departure to France, now?" she said to Mrs. Bregy.

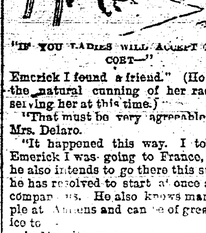
"No," replied that lady. "It is our intention to leave as arranged, and there is one delightful circumstance connected with my visit to Mr. Emerick's which I must mention."

"Indeed—what is it?" asked Mrs. Delaro.

"It is this," said Mrs. Bregy. "Although I did not find a husband in Mr. Emerick I found a friend." (How well the natural cunning of her race was serving her at this time.)

"That must be very agreeable," said Mrs. Delaro.

"It happened this way. I told Mr. Emerick I was going to France, and as he also intends to go there this summer he has resolved to start at once and accompany us. He also knows many people at Amiens and can be of great service to



"IF YOU LADIES WILL ACCEPT MY ESCORT—"

Emerick I found a friend." (How well the natural cunning of her race was serving her at this time.)

"That must be very agreeable," said Mrs. Delaro.

"It happened this way. I told Mr. Emerick I was going to France, and as he also intends to go there this summer he has resolved to start at once and accompany us. He also knows many people at Amiens and can be of great service to

"He went down to South America during the early part of January, and has never been heard of since," replied Armida.

"Did he go on pleasure or business?" asked Mr. Blodger.

"He went on business. Mr. Lovel is the gentleman to whom Mr. Wilcox left so much money."

"Bless my life to think that I am executor and don't know that," said the bloated bondholder. Adding by way of excuse, "Well, I left every thing to the lawyers to settle and I know they are both I can trust."

Here Mrs. Delaro ventured to remark that she did not think it would be any use to wait all summer expecting news of Percy.

"The body which was found in the river must have been his and the poor fellow is undoubtedly dead."

"But what will become of all that money, mamma?" asked Armida.

"Oh let the money rest, my child; some one will claim it some day," was the answer.

"Well, then, if you ladies will accept my escort, we will arrange a date to start to Europe. I suppose you will not object to my taking Stephen Blodger, Jr., along?" said Mr. Blodger.

"Not if you take the precaution to warn the steward of the ship to lay in an extra supply of provisions—that boy has such an immense appetite. It would be awful if the provisions ran short in mid-ocean in consequence of it," said Armida, in a joking manner.

"Armida, please be serious," said her mother, gravely.

"Oh, I must break out occasionally, mamma, or I shall grow melancholy." Mrs. Delaro accepted her daughter's answer as an indisputable fact.

The result of the conversation was that Mr. Blodger was deputized to make arrangements for their early departure by way of Liverpool. He lost no time in doing it, and that very day he secured berths on a Cunarder sailing the last week in May. When the day came everybody was ready, and, as the noble ship steamed down the harbor out on to the broad Atlantic, Mrs. Delaro's mind was full of thoughts regarding the occurrences of the years since her beloved husband was torn from her side.

"Will my purpose ever be fulfilled?" she could ask herself. "And must that villain be permitted to still remain this earth without paying the penalty of his crime?"

During her life on board ship she had ample opportunity for undisturbed communion with her thoughts, and somehow she had a presentiment that the desire of her life would still be accomplished. Often she would almost give voice to the lines:

"The mills of the gods grind slowly,
But they grind exceeding small."

Then with renewed hope in her breast she would join the merry throng of pleasure-seekers and endeavor to drive her thoughts into a pleasanter channel, though none but herself knew how much the effort cost her.

Upon arriving in London they went immediately to the hotel which Armida had named to Mrs. Bregy, and at once Blodger was delighted. Day after day he would trudge around with untiring zeal, and he insisted on dragging Armida along with him, until she grew tired of it all and excused herself from most of his excursions.

Mr. Blodger spent a great deal of his time at the American Exhibition. He was interested in some patents being exhibited there and also met a large number of new acquaintances. Some of these he would often invite to spend the evening at his rooms in the hotel, and, as Mrs. Delaro occupied a suite of rooms on the same floor, he frequently introduced a number of Americans to her. This led to receptions and parties of various kinds, and finally, finding that the incessant whirl was too much for her, she decided to leave the busy city for a time and spend a few weeks at Bournemouth, whither she and her daughter went.

On the other side of the channel, Mr. Emerick, in charge of Mrs. Bregy and her son, was busy at Amiens, exerting his utmost endeavors to procure a settlement with Mrs. Bregy's relatives, so as to avoid the necessity of expensive litigation.

His knowledge of the world was of great value to his quondam wife and she was placing implicit faith in his ability to push matters to a successful issue and settle every thing favorably. Her judgment was correct and it did not take long for them to secure the large legacy. But no sooner was a final settlement effected than Emerick proposed to Mrs. Bregy that she should dispose of the property and turn it into cash, after which they could return to America. This she did not appear quite willing to do, as she preferred to remain in France, at least long enough to permit Eugene to finish a course of studies in Paris, in which city he had already secured tutors in various branches.

It should be understood, however, that Mr. Emerick did not show any undue haste in advising Mrs. Bregy to dispose of her property. He took letters and resolved to let affairs run [illegible] into a certainty. But [illegible] more precipitate [illegible] Mr. [illegible] discuss finances to-seen Eugene in the New York grocery store a few weeks ago would not have recognized him again under present conditions. He had rigged himself up precisely after the fashion of his newfound associates and was now a correct type of the Parisian dude. He also fell into their ways with alarming alacrity and could already consume as much wine and smoke as many cigars as any in the crowd. He was not only like them in respect to enjoyments but also in study. It is one of the remarkable things about Parisian students that no matter how late they remain out at night or to what extent their midnight orgies may be carried they are always present at the lecture and generally pass successfully through their course of study.

Mr. Emerick did not confide the secret of his wife's recognizance to Eugene at once. He proposed to wait until he saw fully which way the boy was going. His nightly sprees were becoming expensive, and he was running through a great deal of money. In fact, Eugene was fast approaching a financial dilemma, and had already written to his mother to send him on a further supply. Of course his mother sent it at once, but still she wondered why he needed it. If he made such drafts as that on his slender stock of money left from the sale of the store he would soon be entirely dependent upon his mother, and, notwithstanding that she was ready and willing to find him all he wanted, she could not help speculating as to why it was he spent so much.

The Sunday after Mr. Emerick joined Eugene in Paris, they both went out to the races and on their way home Eugene told Mr. Emerick he had bet his last napoleon and lost it. He need not have told this, however, for Mr. Emerick had watched him carefully and knew as much. Yet he did not betray his previous knowledge when Eugene told his tale. They were rolling along the Champs Elysees when the conversation took place, and, as they turned off toward the street where they were going to take dinner, Mr. Emerick was about to tell Eugene that he would assist him to any extent when that young man interrupted him with an expression of joy. Eugene hailed the driver to stop and before Mr. Emerick knew what had happened a deadedly fast-looking Parisian belle was being handed to the carriage. Simple as the occurrence might seem to any one acquainted with life in the French metropolis, it meant a great deal with Mr. Emerick and convinced him that he would be able to carry out the scheme he had in mind with the greatest of ease, so far as finding a dupe was concerned.

To have seen the manner in which the father and son spent the afternoon and evening one would hardly have imagined that they were the same pair who kneeled so devoutly at the service in the Madelaine in the morning. Still, they only did as thousands of others did whose religion was a weekly affair, occupying about two hours each Sunday.

They had kneeled and sat side by side in that beautiful and solemn edifice in [illegible] dance-hall, called the Tivoli, situated on a side street near the Place du Chateau D'Eau. They had for a few moments drawn away from the crowd inside, and were sitting in the shade of some trees at a little table outside the main hall. Each was excited with wine and the older had become communicative.

"Eugene," he said. "You are having a pretty lively time of it over here. Rather more lively than weighing tea, anyhow?"

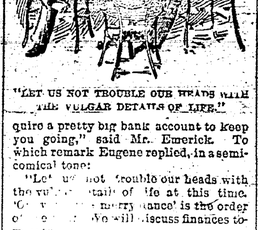
"Well, I should say I am," was the response, in a maudlin voice.

"And what do suppose this fun is going to cost you?" asked Mr. Emerick.

"My head is in no condition for figures and I couldn't tell you, replied Eugene.

"It seems to me that if you move along at this rate much more it will require a pretty big bank account to keep you going," said Mr. Emerick. To which remark Eugene replied, in a semi-comical tone:

"Let us not trouble our heads with the vulgar details of life at this time. 'Let us be merry, dance' is the order of the day. We will discuss finances to-



"LET US NOT TROUBLE OUR HEADS WITH THE VULGAR DETAILS OF LIFE."

[illegible]

"He went down to South America during the early part of January, and has never been heard of since," replied Armida.

"Did he go on pleasure or business?" asked Mr. Blodger.

"He went on business. Mr. Lovel is the gentleman to whom Mr. Wilcox left so much money."

"Bless my life to think that I am executor and don't know that," said the bloated bondholder. Adding by way of excuse, "Well, I left every thing to the lawyers to settle and I know they are both I can trust."

Here Mrs. Delaro ventured to remark that she did not think it would be any use to wait all summer expecting news of Percy.

"The body which was found in the river must have been his and the poor fellow is undoubtedly dead."

"But what will become of all that money, mamma?" asked Armida.

"Oh let the money rest, my child; some one will claim it some day," was the answer.

"Well, then, if you ladies will accept my escort, we will arrange a date to start to Europe. I suppose you will not object to my taking Stephen Blodger, Jr., along?" said Mr. Blodger.

"Not if you take the precaution to warn the steward of the ship to lay in an extra supply of provisions—that boy has such an immense appetite. It would be awful if the provisions ran short in mid-ocean in consequence of it," said Armida, in a joking manner.

"Armida, please be serious," said her mother, gravely.

"Oh, I must break out occasionally, mamma, or I shall grow melancholy." Mrs. Delaro accepted her daughter's answer as an indisputable fact.

The result of the conversation was that Mr. Blodger was deputized to make arrangements for their early departure by way of Liverpool. He lost no time in doing it, and that very day he secured berths on a Cunarder sailing the last week in May. When the day came everybody was ready, and, as the noble ship steamed down the harbor out on to the broad Atlantic, Mrs. Delaro's mind was full of thoughts regarding the occurrences of the years since her beloved husband was torn from her side.

"Will my purpose ever be fulfilled?" she could ask herself. "And must that villain be permitted to still remain this earth without paying the penalty of his crime?"

During her life on board ship she had ample opportunity for undisturbed communion with her thoughts, and somehow she had a presentiment that the desire of her life would still be accomplished. Often she would almost give voice to the lines:

"The mills of the gods grind slowly,
But they grind exceeding small."

Then with renewed hope in her breast she would join the merry throng of pleasure-seekers and endeavor to drive her thoughts into a pleasanter channel, though none but herself knew how much the effort cost her.

Upon arriving in London they went immediately to the hotel which Armida had named to Mrs. Bregy, and at once Blodger was delighted. Day after day he would trudge around with untiring zeal, and he insisted on dragging Armida along with him, until she grew tired of it all and excused herself from most of his excursions.

Mr. Blodger spent a great deal of his time at the American Exhibition. He was interested in some patents being exhibited there and also met a large number of new acquaintances. Some of these he would often invite to spend the evening at his rooms in the hotel, and, as Mrs. Delaro occupied a suite of rooms on the same floor, he frequently introduced a number of Americans to her. This led to receptions and parties of various kinds, and finally, finding that the incessant whirl was too much for her, she decided to leave the busy city for a time and spend a few weeks at Bournemouth, whither she and her daughter went.

On the other side of the channel, Mr. Emerick, in charge of Mrs. Bregy and her son, was busy at Amiens, exerting his utmost endeavors to procure a settlement with Mrs. Bregy's relatives, so as to avoid the necessity of expensive litigation.

His knowledge of the world was of great value to his quondam wife and she was placing implicit faith in his ability to push matters to a successful issue and settle every thing favorably. Her judgment was correct and it did not take long for them to secure the large legacy. But no sooner was a final settlement effected than Emerick proposed to Mrs. Bregy that she should dispose of the property and turn it into cash, after which they could return to America. This she did not appear quite willing to do, as she preferred to remain in France, at least long enough to permit Eugene to finish a course of studies in Paris, in which city he had already secured tutors in various branches.

Fall Brook—M. S. Murray
Gaines—John Pitcher
Hamilton—J. N. Armstrong
Jackson—J. H. Mosier
Lawrenceville—R. W. Stewart
Liberty—Simon Bastian.
Mansfield—J. H. Potts.
Middlebury—Geo. W. Davis.
Nelson—W. H. Baxter.
Rutland—Jud Oldroyd.
Tioga—D. C. McAllister.
Union—Mat McCormick.
Wellsboro—John W. Bailey.
Westfield—Frank Strang.

E. H. MOSHER,
Blossburg, December 15, 1890. Chairman.

DISGUSTED with Delamater, Quay says the late Republican candidate for Governor showed his base ingratitude in fleecing his political friends.

THE Harrisburg Patriot says: "No matter how high the thermometer may go this Winter it couldn't reach the McKinley bill with a step ladder."

THE total receipts by the State Treasury last year were $8,625,919. The Philadelphia Times says that "the total expenditures will not be known until all the political banks are heard from."

AN exchange says one of the funny things about the McKinley tariff law is that a duty of three cents a head is put on cabbage, while sauerkraut is admitted free. Here is certainly a distinction without a difference.

TUESDAY's daily papers recorded the failure of fourteen large firms. With one or two exceptions these firms were all engaged in manufacturing enterprises. If this is the kind of prosperity created by the McKinley bill it is time a halt was called.

BOSTON was carried by the Democrats on Wednesday of last week by a majority of 13,000, reversing the Republican plurality of 5,600 of last year, besides capturing the board of aldermen and city council. This is a landslide and a rebuke to corrupt Republican politicians in that city. In fact it appears to be a year noted for its immense Democratic landslides.

MURAT HALSTEAD asserts that the Republicans have packed the Senate so that the Democrats will be unable to gain control of the same during the present century. The Republicans attempted to pack the House, but the people interfered last November, and the Republican packers of the Senate will hear something drop when the people score their rights in the near future.

THE present system of scattering the State moneys around in different banks—large amounts being often placed as a matter of favoritism—is wrong, however, and should be changed.—Philadelphia Press. The eagerness of Republican journals to endorse a Democratic position is remarkable. Their endorsement would have had more weight had it been given before election.

SITTING BULL will make the settlers of the Northwest no more trouble. He was killed last Monday morning by the Indian police, who were attempting to arrest the wily old chief, who had already started for the Bad Lands to incite the Sioux there to acts of bloodshed. Seven of the police and eight of Sitting Bull's braves were killed in the melee. This will probably end the Indian war.

A REPUBLICAN Republican journal asserts that "it appears probable that a bill for the free coinage of silver will be passed by Congress at this session, but it will meet the President's veto, which is not likely to be overcome." Tom Reed is also opposed to the free coinage of silver. Tom is opposed to Democrats; but the November elections show that the people do not sustain the objections of either Reed or Harrison.

SEVERAL of the GAZETTE's contemporaries have stated that Hon. M. F. Elliott has filed a notice of his intention to contest the election of Mr. A. C. Hopkins to the Fifty-second Congress. If Mr. Elliott has filed any such paper none of his political friends are aware of it, and, as Mr. Elliott is out of town, the GAZETTE is unable to affirm or deny the truth of the statement. If Mr. Elliott contests the election of Mr. Hopkins, however, it will be because he is thoroughly satisfied that it was secured through fraud.

—Now that the Agitator has [illegible] forced to adopt the use of stereotype plates, [illegible] of a few years ago. This way of doing business is a fraud and a swindle. It is a fraud on the subscribers, as it takes the place of compositors. It is quite as much of a fraud as the "patent process," that is, buying the paper with one side already printed.

—The Agitator is getting along amazingly in the use of "degraded stereotype plates." The stories and miscellaneous matter generally are conceded to be far superior to that for merly selected by any other editor. A few years ago in speaking of the use of stereotype plates, the Agitator said: "Editors who are ambitious of publishing a big sheet at a little expense to compete with some live newspaper resort to the use of these stereotype plates, in some cases nearly half of the reading space being filled with them. Half of the Agitator's reading space is now filled with these plates. This way of doing business is a fraud and a cheat. It is a fraud on the subscribers and a cheat to the printers, as it takes the place of compositors. It is quite as much of a fraud as the 'patent process,' that is, buying the paper with one side already printed."

Officers Elected and Arrangements Made for Holding a Reunion.

The survivors of Company G, 45th Pa. Vols., held a meeting at the Willcox House last Saturday afternoon and perfected a permanent organization. The following members answered to roll-call: James S. English, Darius H. Hotchkiss, Thomas J. Davies, John J. Rogers, Hiram D. Deming, Eugene Beauge, Ephraim Jeffers, William E. Peck, Samuel R. Rogers, Thomas J. Rogers, David E. Bowen, Vihemas S. Culver, Nelson Whitney, John J. Johnson, Thomas J. Butler, Josiah C. Reese, Reuben F. Patterson and Andrew J. Kiphart.

The following officers were then elected: President, Lieut. Thomas J. Davies; Vice President, Lieut. John J. Rogers; Secretary, Steward Hiram D. Deming; Recording Secretary, Sergeant Eugene Beauge; Treasurer, Lieut. Ephraim Jeffers.

Several short speeches were then made by the President and others, stating the object of the organization and the proposed regimental reunion which is to be held on Monday, March 2, 1891.

Messrs. Samuel R. Rogers, James S. English and Ephraim Jeffers, were appointed a committee of arrangements for the reunion. This is the first meeting of the company since its discharge in 1865.

CHERRY FLATS AFFLICTED.

Diphtheria Raging in a Most Malignant Form—Six Cases and Four Deaths.

Diphtheria in its most malignant form is raging in and around Cherry Flats. Six cases and four deaths have so far been reported. The spread of the disease is largely due to the negligence of the people in that section. One of the physicians, it is said, having made the assertion that the disease was not contagious. This statement has caused many people to throw aside all precaution, and the dread scourge has spread with great rapidity. Now the people are alarmed and it is a very difficult matter to secure competent nurses to care for the afflicted.

On Monday or Tuesday of last week the two step-sons of Hurty Sampson—Fred Marvin, aged 20, and Frank Marvin, 18 years of age were taken down with the malady. Their condition grew steadily worse, the eldest dying at an early hour on Saturday morning while standing drinking at a table. His remains had hardly been interred when his brother died. Some of the neighbors immediately came to Wellsboro, procured a coffin and returned to the desolate home. The body was then placed in the coffin, and about three o'clock on Sunday morning was taken to the cemetery and placed in a grave dug by some of the young men of the neighborhood.

Sunday afternoon both Sampson and his wife, the latter being quite ill from a recent trouble, were taken with diphtheria. They were unable to obtain any assistance, though having means to pay for the same, the residents of that section having become so alarmed at the rapid spread of the disease that they were afraid to venture in the home of Sampsons and minister to their wants. On Tuesday morning a resident of Cherry Flats drove to Wellsboro and laid the case before the County Commissioners, who informed him where he could find a couple of competent nurses. It is probable that the disease will continue to spread, owing to the lax manner in which it has been handled by those who have held that it was not contagious.

AFTER A LAPSE OF FORTY-SIX YEARS.

Mrs. Dampf Sues an Estate for Her Share.

(From the New York World.)

Mrs. J. H. H. Dampf, the wife of an [illegible], has returned from Troy, Pa., where she went to look up her interest in the estate of her deceased father. Mr. and Mrs. Dampf feel that justice has not been done her in the administration of the estate, and for fifteen years they have been knocking at the doors of the halls of justice in Pennsylvania and New York.

Her father, Daniel T. Pomeroy died in Troy in April, 1844. He and his brothers Samuel and Horace, did a banking business under the firm name of Pomeroy Bros., at Troy, and after his death the will could not be found.

"After the funeral my uncle, Eleazer Pomeroy, was appointed administrator of the estate," said Mrs. Dampf to a World reporter who called upon her. "From the manner in which we had lived I had reason to believe that my father was very rich at the time of his death, and up to this day I have had no reason to change that opinion. Among other property owned by the Pomeroy brothers were some parcels of land near Troy, and my uncles said that they had had the land appraised and either they would purchase my interest or I could trade. I knew nothing of real estate values, so said I would sell to them. Later Orlando T. Saltmarsh, one of the clerks in the bank, brought five deeds to me to sign. I was ill at the time and unable to read them, so he read, or pretended to read them to me. He, however, omitted to read one clause, which was worded: 'I sign away all my right and title to all real estate in possession of the Pomeroy Bros.' I signed the five documents under the impression that they alluded to five particular parcels of which my three uncles had spoken to me. There were, however, three blocks of stores. About two years later my uncle Eleazer, the administrator, told me that so far as they could ascertain my father's interests in the banking business and its investments amounted to only $99,000, which would be divided between my step-mother, myself and my half-brother.

"In 1875 I married Mr. Dampf, then a wealthy artist of Corning, N. Y., and together we went to the bank for a settlement. There were present Samuel and Horace Pomeroy, E. B. Parsons, my husband and myself. Samuel B. Aspinwall, teller of the bank, came in with what he called a statement of account. I was not satisfied with the amount they were allowing me as my share and asked my uncles to allow me to get an accountant to examine the books. This was denied. They gave me a twelve-month note for $35,000 and $2,000 in cash on account of my third of the estate and promised to pay the balance shortly. I found deeds of real estate in Bradford, Luzerne, Tioga and Lycoming counties, of which at the time of the settlement I was ignorant. Thereupon I retained the services of counsel to investigate the estate and protect my interests. I had given my husband a power of attorney to go to Pomeroy Bros. and collect the balance which they admitted due on the $99,000 basis of settlement. This was paid and he gave a receipt for it, but instead of signing simply for the actual cash he received he was induced to sign a quit claim on all my interest in my father's share of the property of Pomeroy Bros. Judge Morrow, of Towanda, when my application for an accounting came before him, decided that I had no standing in court as the Pomeroy Bros. held a receipt in full, given by J. H. Dampf, my husband. The Supreme Court in Philadelphia, however, reversed Judge Morrow's decision, declaring the receipt null and void, and ordered an accounting, and James Codding, of Towanda, was appointed referee. The case was again before the Supreme Court asking for an accounting on the recommendation of the referee. The majority of the judges were in my favor, but Judge Mercur held out against me. We felt that justice would not be given us there, so we removed to New York and retained Lawyer Treadwell. My husband has already spent $20,000 on the suit for an accounting. I think there is about $200,000 due me yet."

MATTERS AT MANSFIELD.

A Little Girl's Life of Suffering—Cutting Out a Cancer—Other Items.

Mr. Frank Hunt, of Binghamton, N. Y., has moved his family to this place and opened a variety store in the Opera House block, on Wellsboro street.

Mrs. Bert M. Vodder, of Canoe Camp, has been suffering severely for a couple of months with a cancer in the right breast. A council of physicians, recently held, determined that the only remedy with any hope of success was the knife, and in pursuance of this determination Drs. Robert B. Smith and Charles B. Borden, of Tioga, assisted by Dr. Moody, of this place, performed a successful operation last week Tuesday.

The eldest daughter of Mr. W. V. Powers, the well-known cooper, who lives on the Troy road a mile and one-half east of here, in Richmond, is lying at the point of death with scarlet fever, or a relapse from the same caused by taking cold. Her age is about thirteen years, and her child life has been spent in [illegible] happy. When [illegible] was terrible [illegible] taking fire [illegible] to lie [illegible] or [illegible]

THE BEST BARGAIN EVER OFFERED IN SEWING MACHINES.

A $45 Sewing Machine for $15

Including One Year's Subscription to this Paper.

We have made such arrangements as to enable us to offer the Chicago

Singer Sewing Machines

At lower rates than ever before for a good machine, and we offer our readers the advantage of the unprecedented bargains.

This machine is made after the latest models of the singer machines, and is a perfect facsimile in shape, ornamentation and appearance. All the parts are made to gauge exactly the same as the Singer, and are constructed of precisely the same materials.

The utmost care is exercised in the selection of the metals used, and only the best quality is purchased. Each machine is thoroughly well made and is fitted with the finishing touch of exactness, and no machine is permitted by the inspector to go out of the shops until it has been fully tested and proved to do perfect work, and simplified and adjusted.

The CHICAGO SINGER MACHINE has a very popular improvement, it is a Loose Balance Wheel, so constructed as to permit winding bobbins without removing the work from the machine.

The Loose Balance Wheel is actuated by a solid bolt passing through a collar securely pinned to the shaft outside of the balance wheel, which bolt is firmly held to position by a strong spiral spring. When a bobbin is to be wound, the bolt is pulled out far enough to release the balance wheel, and turned slightly to the right or left, where it is held by a stop-pin until the bobbin is filled. Where the machine is liable to be meddled with by children, the bolt can be left out of the wheel when not in use, so that the machine cannot be operated by the treadle. The thread eyelet and the needle clamp are made self-threading, which is a very great convenience.

Each Machine, of whatever Style, is Furnished with the Following Attachments:

1 FOOT HEMMER.	6 Hemmers, all different widths
1 FOOT BURNISHER.	1 SCREW-DRIVER.
1 TUCKER.	1 GAUGE.
1 PACKAGE OF NEEDLES.	1 WRENCH.
1 BACK SPRING.	1 GAUGE-SCREW.
1 THROAT PLATE.	1 THREAD-CUTTER.
	1 OIL CAN, filled with Oil.
	1 INSTRUCTION BOOK.
	5 BURRINE

The driving wheel on this machine is admitted to be the simplest, easiest running and most convenient of any. The machine is self-threading, has the very best tension and thread liberator, is made of the best material, with the wearing parts hardened, and is finished in a superior style. It has removable covers, drop leaf table, 8 and drawers and center swing drawer. The manufacturers warrant every machine for 5 years.

High Testimonials from Subscribers Using this Machine.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Dec. 18, 1889.
I received your premium sewing machine year ago and am well pleased with it. Would not exchange it for machines sold here for fifty dollars. I thank you a thousand times for such a valuable premium.

Wellsboro Gazette.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1890.

The Rose-Tree Cradle.

"Why, Betty! How do, sir? Is this how the people live for all—as a—?"
It ain't. Well, my lucky's to home, sir; not raving! Oh, no. He's a lad—
And of his own way I wouldn't be thinkin' to feckdish her here;
But it ain't no use anyhu' matters when sister-in-laws interfere.

You see it were this how: last Thursday we parted with baby—with Chick;
The prettiest child in the country; the rompin'est lass! Sure he got sick.
And his mother, poor gal, took it badly when we toiled her as baby was dead,
For she didn't shed tears like she'd orter but she—Oh! she's—she's—her h—d.

And when baby was put in the parlor she crept so I'd up to the box,
And we buried her say, "Go to sleep, darlin'," as she brushed back his beautiful lock.
But next day she was sleepin' herself, sir, when they come from the town with the hearse,
So we went to the graveyard without her, and saved her the sterics, or worse.

Well, when we got back from the fun'ral, that was Lucy's agentin' the tea,
On the table was things, knives and saucers, for her and the sister and me;
But I can't—I can't—I can't—I give me to see the cloth, pinched up
Just as bright as it shined on his birthday, our poor Chickey's active tea-cup!

Then the sister she stares to account, and says she, With her face—very white—
"Where—how—don't you know that the baby won't want any supper to-night?"
Then I put down my cup on the saucer, a finger and thumb—for baby wouldn't see—
And—she saw—then I'm—I'm—I'm—
